

A Word about Potholes in Bridgeton

As we enter into what road crews call “pothole season”, the Bridgeton Department of Public Works wants to let you know that they are working on the pothole problem, but it calls for some patience and understanding.

Due to the extreme freezing and thawing that has occurred so far this winter, the roads are in bad shape with many potholes. One of the challenges is being able to get a good pliable road patch that will adhere to the road surface. Unfortunately, the asphalt plants are very limited as to when and how much patch they make at this time of year.

But all residents should know that we are working on filling potholes throughout the community and will continue to work through the end of the winter season.

As we get closer to spring and the asphalt plants can increase the quantity and quality of asphalt, the Department of Public Works will be attacking the pothole problem in Bridgeton on a street-by-street basis.

More than anything, we appreciate your patience and understanding as we work to make our community the best that it can be.
